Global teacher survey

UNESCO and Education International are reaching out to teachers across the globe as part of a global study of teachers' readiness to teach education for sustainable development and global citizenship. They are asking you to complete a survey, which will help them understand your experience with teaching climate change education, sustainable consumption and production, human rights and gender equality, and cultural diversity and tolerance in your lessons, how you manage it in the classroom and school, and what kind of training and support you need. The information you provide will remain anonymous. No personal information or individual opinions can be disclosed and there is no way to track the identity of the respondents.

This survey takes approximately 30 minutes to complete - Click here to start the survey

Should you need more information or have any questions, please contact the company running the survey on behalf of UNESCO, PPMI, at: esdgcedsurvey@ppmi.it

AEU First Nations education seminar series – online

You are invited to attend a critical national conversation about the state of First Nations education policy and its impact on practice in today's classrooms. It takes place on Thursday 22 April from 5.30pm – 7.00pm.

Don't miss this opportunity to hear from the expert panel. You can find more information on this flyer. Please register via this link.

Photo competition

The Queensland College of Teachers (QCT) is celebrating 50 years of teacher registration this year. Our jobs have changed so much in that time. In honour of this milestone, the QCT is hosting a photo competition with the theme "Past, present, future - look how far we've come". If you are doing anything with students, or have great photos or images of historic, current or future thinking (see example below), you can enter here. Entries close 30 April.
